Heffernan family will battle on

COURTS

Vows to appeal decision to not lay charges in police killing

Lucie Edwardson
Metro | Calgary

The Heffernan family said they'd be pursuing all legal avenues in their quest for justice in the death of Anthony Heffernan, shot and killed in a 2015 confrontation with police.

Grant Heffernan, brother to Anthony, told Metro on Tuesday that he and his family would be appealing the Alberta Crown Prosecutor's Service (ACPS) decision to not proceed with charges recommended by ASIRT against the officer who shot Anthony four times, including twice to the head.

"Our lawyer explained to us briefly that he believes their interpretation of the law was wrong in terms of the use-of-force expert and reasonable grounds for the officer to shoot solely," said Grant.

Furthermore, Grant said they feel the use-of-force expert was biased, given that he was a former police officer.

Heffernan said they'd hoped this would have ended with the ASIRT investigation but said even if their appeal fails they will push Anthony's case forward.

"We're going to appeal the decision, have the case looked at in another jurisdiction and if that doesn't work we will pursue a civil suit," he said.

Province's deficit nears $11B

BUDGET

Fort McMurray fire adds $500M to projected shortfall: Ceci

The devastating Fort McMurray wildfire is expected to torch Alberta's bottom line by about $500 million this year.

Finance Minister Joe Ceci says he has had to revise the projected deficit upward in his first-quarter fiscal update to almost $11 billion from $10.4 billion and said the economic headwinds Alberta faces are strong.

"This year those headwinds are blowing even harder as a result of the Wood Buffalo wildfire," he said

Regardless, Ceci said, the province will stick to its plan of avoiding deep cuts to the civil service, while continuing to accumulate debt to pay for roads, infrastructure, health and education.

"We're not going to make knee-jerk cuts. We're not going to make things worse for Albertans," he said.

Ceci said the province paid out $647 million in disaster relief, a figure reduced to $195 million after federal aid transfers.

On top of that, the province estimates it lost another $300 million in revenue, because the fire severely curtailed oilsands and forestry activity in the area.

Rebuilding parts of Fort McMurray is expected to boost provincial growth in the years to come, but business losses are expected to cancel out any such stimulus this year.

The Fort McMurray numbers come on top of gloomy forecasts as low oil prices continue to depress Alberta's economy, although a modest recovery is predicted for 2017.

Alberta's real GDP, the benchmark figure representing all of Alberta's newly produced goods and services, is predicted to fall 2.7 per cent, mainly due to the fire. It fell 3.7 per cent last year. It's a back-to-back plunge not seen since the last Alberta oil crash in the 1980s.

Alberta will rack up $32 billion in debt this year and remains on track for $58 billion in debt by 2019.

Debt servicing costs have now surpassed $1 billion a year and Alberta's debt-to-GDP ratio is up to 10.25 per cent.

Opposition Wildrose critic Glenn van Dijken said the NDP needs to create a plan to balance the books by reducing spending and streamlining services, rather than simply wishing high oil prices will return.

"If we don't act now, it will only mean higher taxes for future generations and less services," said van Dijken.

Progressive Conservative Leader Ric McIver agreed.

"It's evident that the NDP has no intention of being responsible stewards of taxpayer dollars and will forge ahead with their reckless agenda, no matter what it ends up costing Albertans," said McIver in a news release.

Alberta Party Leader Greg Clark said NDP policies are failing Albertans, starting with a hike of the corporate tax rate to 12 per cent from 10 per cent.

"Despite big corporate tax increases, Alberta's tax revenues are way down and will continue to drop because the NDs have done nothing to create a positive investment climate," Clark said in a news release.

"In fact, they've done the opposite." THE CANADIAN PRESS

MUNICIPAL GOVERNANCE ACT

Changes could be costly, think-tank warns

Helen Pike
Metro | Calgary

A grassroots think-tank is telling the province to scrap its risky changes to municipal powers — but the government is pushing back, asserting this group has muddled the facts.

On Tuesday, the Manning Centre released a 60-page report on the government's tweaks to the Modernized Municipal Governance Act (MMGA) critiquing its top down approach to governance and alleging changes would bring more taxes on cash-strapped Albertans.

Dan Osborne, author of the report, said from the centre's standpoint, after having reviewed the government's documents, the province needs to go back to square one. "If they don't want to scrap (the Modernized Municipal Government Act) they're certainly going to have to change it quite a bit," Osborne said. "They need to take an opposite approach; instead of taking a top-down coercive approach they need to take a voluntary competitive approach."

The report outlines four main concerns with the tabled bill: inclusionary zoning, a suggested water shortage, conservation reserves and infrastructure.

According to Osborne, the province's plans would needlessly hog land prime for development with their plans to create conservation reserves — which could ultimately harm the environment by adding longer commutes for Calgarians. It also overstates the province's water supply problem, complicates affordable housing by bumping up market housing costs through indirectly costing developers more.

As the city grows, the Manning Centre is proposing to look towards best practices from Texas, including the privatization of utilities through what's called a municipal utility district.

Iconic store selling off everything

RILEY AND MCCORMICK

Old catalogues found as store prepares to close its doors

Brodie Thomas
Metro | Calgary

To the untrained eye, the hats, shirts and boots in the 1961 Riley and McCormick Western Wear Catalogue look the same as what's available on the store shelves today.

But for store owner Brian Guichon, the styles are dated.

"There were styles unique to the times," he said as he flipped through the catalogue at his store on Stephen Avenue. "The basic batwing chap hasn't changed a lot."

As the iconic Calgary clothing store prepares to close its doors for good, it's possible for customers to pick up a bit of history that won't hang in their closet.

Guichon found a stash of catalogues dating back to 1961, and he's selling them off along with the store's remaining cowboy boots, hats, shirts and jeans.

Turning the page, he comes to the spurs and saddles — something Riley and McCormick stopped carrying around 1973.

Guichon said the catalogues are selling well, especially with former employees, because they often find themselves on the page.

"We didn't pay for models. They generally worked for us," said Guichon.

He grabbed a catalogue from the 1990s and pointed out past employees, or old boyfriends and girlfriends of employees who were also roped into modeling.

Guichon is the third generation store owner. His grandfather was the store's namesake, Eneas McCormick.

The other namesake, Riley, was a travelling saddle maker who made a business of helping apprentice saddle makers set up shops.

He went into business with them with the understanding that they'd eventually buy him out.

"It was sort of a franchise model," said Guichon.

The store now has most items on for half price, and they're set to close at the end of the month.

Notley ready to march in Pride parade

Rachel Notley will be participating in Calgary's pride parade for the second year.

On Tuesday, Calgary Pride announced the premier would be marching in their 26th annual parade.

"Calgary Pride is a special event that brings Albertans together to celebrate our diversity and promote equality," said the premier in a release.

"Our government stands with you in ensuring safe and inclusive schools for our kids, protecting gender identity and expression in law, and fostering an inclusive province where all Albertans have opportunities to succeed."

The Calgary Pride parade is scheduled for Sept. 4. from 12 to 1:30 p.m. along 9 Avenue. METRO

POSTAL SERVICE

Couriers will deliver traffic tickets to you

The Calgary Police Service (CPS) announced Tuesday it would start using courier services to deliver photo enforcement tickets during the potential service disruption by Canada Post.

Due to the risk of potential disruption over the past two months, the CPS has not processed any automated enforcement summons since mid-June.

The force obtained a court order that will now allow couriers to ensure secure delivery while there is still the potential for service disruption. This began Monday, and CPS is looking to clear the backlog of summonses from mid-June to present date as soon as possible.

Members of the public receiving a summons will have the same right to challenge it as outlined on the reverse of the ticket. METRO

PUBLIC INFRASTRUCTURE

Sensors warn if vehicles too high to drive under bridge

Helen Pike
Metro | Calgary

It's kind of like reverse limbo; when a city bridge tells you how low it can go.

But most commuters don't have to worry when zooming through the CP rail underpasses, or through traffic and under the Plus 15 arches carrying hundreds of pedestrians daily.

But in the game of getting caught under a bridge, it's not just the driver having a bad day. The city can foot expensive bills when tall vehicles forget to skirt around low-hanging infrastructure.

That's where the infrared over-height vehicle detection systems come in. The system alerts drivers when they are dangerously close to crashing into a bridge. And the city has seven more on order for a total cost of $150,000 over the next three years.

"Trucks hitting downtown bridges and Plus 15s is not common in Calgary," said city spokeswoman Tara Norton-Merrin. "We had three incidents of Plus 15s being impacted in 2015 — all pretty minor. And we have an average of 15 impact incidents each year to bridges in downtown."

But there's no telling when one or two minor incidents can have major impact when the city has to deal with repairs, resources and even traffic management, she added.

"On April 19, police shut down a busy downtown roadway after a semi-tractor trailer unit got wedged under the rail bridge at 1 Street and 9 Avenue SE," she said. "While the damage to the bridge was minimal, it happened at 6 a.m. and had a major impact on the morning commute."

For the Centre Street Bridge, where the city installed a similar system in 2011, these incidents happened about four times a month. Now, the city sees maybe 10 a year, with a cost savings of $300,000. This is calculated in part with repairs and staff time getting vehicles "unstuck."

Norton-Merrin said it only takes one bad crash to see the city reaching deep to make repairs to the tune of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

"But more so than not, the Calgary Fire Department responds to minor incidents of trucks stuck, which costs money in terms of personnel responding as well as major traffic backups for commuters," said Norton-Merrin.

TECH ALERTS

Locations for the infrared system were picked based on height of the bridge or Plus 15 facility. Here are the seven new locations:

- 9th Avenue S.W. and west of 11th Street S.W.
- 5th Avenue between 5th Street and 6th Street
- Centre Street S. between 3rd and 4th avenues
- 4th Avenue S.E., west of 3rd Street (Harry Hays and Delta Bow Valley Inn)
- Macleod Trail S.E. between 10th Avenue S.E. and 11th Avenue S.E.
- 4th Street S.W. between 11th Avenue S.W. and 12th Avenue S.W.
- 1st Street S.E. between 6th Avenue S.E. and 7th Avenue S.E.

EDUCATION

Teach kids privacy: Advocate

Lucie Edwardson
Metro | Calgary

As the Alberta Education Ministry sets out on the massive task of overhauling the province's school curriculums, one advocate is hoping to see a focus on online privacy.

Sharon Polsky, director of the Rocky Mountain Civil Liberties Association said she feels it's important Alberta Education make online privacy a priority in the Career And Life Management (CALM) portion of the new curriculum.

"Considering something like 30 per cent of children have a tablet for their own exclusive use by the time they're one and the vast majority have daily time with electronic devices by the time they're two— it's the same thing as giving a kid your car keys and saying have a nice time, stay safe on the road — they don't understand the implications of what they're doing," she said.

Larissa Liepins, press-secretary for David Eggen, Minister of Education, said they're interested in hearing input from concerned citizens about what should be included in the new provincial curriculum.

"Consideration for teaching privacy and protection in the curriculum will be a broad conversation," she said.

Polsky said by including online privacy in education early on we're creating safer and more self-aware people.

"An educated public can make better choices, be more self-reliant, make better laws, understand what they're doing when they use a computer or create a profile or and app," she said.

BUSINESS

Recycling rush ahead of new city regulations kicking in Nov. 1

Brodie Thomas
Metro | Calgary

Companies that offer recycling services for businesses are seeing an influx of customers as new recycling regulations come into effect Nov. 1. BRODIE THOMAS/METRO

An upcoming change in recycling regulations is causing a bit of a green rush for some Calgary businesses.

By Nov. 1, all Calgary businesses and organizations will be required to divert their recyclables from the trash, and that's giving the companies that pick up those recyclable a boost.

Tracey Dennehy, director of Little Big Recycling, said she's getting more and more calls as the deadline creeps up, but often it's just for an estimate.

"I'm putting out lots of quotes, but it's mostly still for Nov. 1."

She suspects with the economy the way it is, businesses want to put off any extra expense until the last second.

Dennehy notes that often, business can avoid any cost increase because once they start diverting their recyclables, they can reduce how often their garbage gets picked up and save money that way.

Her company offers waste audits — where they collect a single day's worth of garbage from a business — and provide measurements of what a business could expect to pay in the long run.

"Companies can do a lot with information because they can decide before they commit to a service," she said.

She expects she'll have to increase her company's workforce by 15 or 20 per cent after November.

Leanne Michie, waste diversion specialist with the City of Calgary, said her office has been out engaging with the business community.

They recently held an open house and have launched an advertising campaign.

"We're just trying to make people aware this is coming and allowing them plenty of time to prepare for the Nov. 1 deadline," she said.

When the new regulations come into play, Michie said they won't actually be out monitoring the garbage coming from businesses. Instead it will be checked on a complaint basis.

She said businesses that are reported and are found to be not recycling will face a $250 fine from a community standards officer. That fine could escalate for repeat offenders.

EMERGENCY RESPONSE

Senior dies in fire

Police have confirmed a man in his 60s died following a fire at a northwest Calgary housing complex Tuesday morning.

Emergency Medical Services (EMS) paramedics and the Calgary Fire Department (CFD) responded to a multi-residential complex located in the 4500 block of 73rd Street N.W. shortly after 7 a.m.

Fire crews saw smoke coming from the balcony of the second-floor apartment. Heat inside the room caused the balcony windows to break.

Crews sprayed water inside and outside the structure to cool it before entering the residence.

They found a man, in his 60s, inside and immediately began CPR while carrying him out. He was transferred to EMS immediately. Paramedics delivered him to Foothills Medical Centre in critical, life-threatening condition.

Police confirmed he later died as a result of his injuries.

Fire crews extinguished the blaze, containing it to the suite, and conducted air-quality analysis throughout the building. Once they determined that the air quality was safe, residents were allowed to re-enter their suites. METRO

Police seek bank robber

Lucie Edwardson
Metro | Calgary

Calgary police are on the hunt for a man who robbed the BMO bank located in the 6500 block of Macleod Trail S.W. on Tuesday morning.

One witness, who asked to be called Bennett, said he was in line to see a teller when he noticed a man acting strangely in front of him.

"He was acting very sketchy and twitchy, looking around a lot and just making me really uncomfortable," he said.

According to Bennett, the suspect was called to a teller. He spoke quietly with her before running off with of cash.

The suspect is described as a Caucasian male in his 20s, with spiky brown hair and very prominent eyebrows.

Acting Det. Jody Cross said the robbery unit is investigating. Anyone with information should contact the CPS non-emergency line at 403-266-1234.

Shakespeare Company staging nabs several awards

Aaron Chatha
Metro | Calgary

Romeo and Juliet's star-crossed fate netted the 2015 Shakespeare Company's production three Betty awards on Monday night, including Allison Lynch as Outstanding Drama Actress.

The annual Betty Mitchell Awards are billed as Calgary's Oscars — but for theatre.

In preparing for her award-winning role as Juliet, Lynch took a trip through time to get into the mind of a 16-year-old in love.

"You know when you write your friends notes (in junior high)?" she laughed. "Like, that was a popular thing, to write notes, fold them up and give them to each other.

"I kept all of these notes from junior high. I don't know why. They're all in my parents basement."

Lynch went through the memories past, and she found many that read 'I'm in love with this person' or 'I'm obsessed with this person.'

She also went through her old diaries, full of embarrassing but good material for the character, more than enough to put her back in the mindset of being a young teenager.

The final bit of the character was completed when she put on the costume.

> He asked me to create a beautiful, romantic and gothic modern world.
> Victoria Krawchuk, costume designer

"A good costume gives you an incredible boost. As soon as I have my costume I'm able to go to that next level," Lynch said.

"It makes me feel comfortable in that character's skin, and Victoria did an amazing job making everyone look beautiful and comfortable."

Lynch was referring to Victoria Krawchuk, the designer who also picked up a Betty for Outstanding Costume Design for Romeo and Juliet.

Krawchuk said her approach to costume design is like building a character from fabrics.

"He (the director) asked me to create a beautiful, romantic and gothic modern world," she explained.

"We could still have them using swords believably, but could also have them in skinny jeans or corsets."

She worked with each actor to realize their striking costumes, including Lynch and actress Amy Burks who won a Best Supporting Actress Betty for — you guessed it — Romeo and Juliet.

Other big winners included The Crucible as outstanding production (with Karl Sine winning outstanding actor) and Naughty But Nice, Too! as outstanding musical.

Rollerblading across America

ADVENTURE

Circuitous route will start in Seattle, end in California

Aaron Chatha
Metro | Calgary

Yanise Ho wants to prove that the vast majority of people have goodness in their hearts.

It's not an easy thing to prove — but Ho is determined. To that end, she's been learning to rollerblade in Calgary, and in September she plans to rollerblade across the United States.

With no money.

Other than the wheels on her feet and the bag on her back, she'll be going it alone, counting on the kindness of strangers the entire way.

Ho said she's not even worried — a world traveller, having backpacked her way across Europe and South America, she's learned to trust people.

"I've never actually met a terrible person," she laughed. "I've been helped by so many good people. It makes me feel terrible when people tell me to be careful, that the world is dangerous. The world's not as dangerous as we perceive."

Her route will take her from Seattle through the upper states to New York. Then she'll skate down through Texas to California.

It will be a world-record breaking trip, and hopefully come with a few less bumps and bruises than her current training regimen.

So far she's covered her body in cuts and road rash, and even split open her head — requiring stitches. Rollerblading is relatively new to her, but she decided to pick it up because it seemed more exciting than walking.

"It might sound stupid, but a bit of faith is all it takes," she said, beaming with optimism.

She hopes to inspire people to be a bit more trusting. A Hong Kong native, she recalled a visit back home, where she landed at the airport without a phone.

In a rich city full of technology, no one would lend her a device to make a call.

"Just because they were afraid I'm a fraud or I'd steal from them," she said.

"It's that fear — they would rather not trust a stranger and it broke my heart. I want to do this to prove to the world to trust."

TUNE IN

Yanise starts her journey on Sept. 21, which is International Peace Day, and will be documenting the adventure on her self-titled YouTube channel, Yanise Ho.

CONSERVATION

New project to help save burrowing owl

The Calgary Zoo is launching an innovative new conservation project to help protect the burrowing owl from extinction.

The process involves raising young burrowing owls from the wild into captivity for nine months to increase their overall survival.

After being collected in the wild, the owlets — who will grow to be no taller than a pigeon — are now being cared for at the zoo's Animal Health Centre before moving to their winter home at the zoo's Devonian Wildlife Conservation Centre.

In the spring of 2017, the young owls will be released back into the wild to breed, with their movements tracked using satellite transmitters.

"Our team worked side-by-side with federal and provincial field staff to gather 15 of the youngest owlets that may not otherwise survive," says Dr. Axel Moehrenschlager, director of conservation and science with the Calgary Zoo. "Following an extremely successful first field season, we are very pleased with our progress to date and will continue to prepare for the next phase of the project."

The zoo will be temporarily housing young burrowing owls until they can mature and be re-released into the wild. COURTESY CALGARY ZOO

The youngest owls from each nest seldom survive, especially in years with poor weather and little food. Few of those that survive return to Canada after migrating through the United States to and from their winter habitat in Mexico.

EMPLOYMENT

Competition heats up early with over 300 roles available

Aaron Chatha

The chance to score a job at the Scotiabank Saddledome drew out hundreds of applicants on Tuesday afternoon — to the point where officials opened doors early for the masses huddled inside.

Recently the Calgary Airport Authority's Job Fair attracted about 2,700 people lining up in droves to the point some had to be turned away.

Unfortunately, despite a promising start, the Flames Job Fair only had about 500 total applicants a few hours after opening the doors, and people were able to move swiftly through to interviews.

By 4 p.m., many of the applicants walking through were teens or young adults.

"I was actually just on the CTrain and I saw on Facebook there's a job fair," said Cody Antoschow, who was recently laid off from the Hilton.

Many estimated that serious job hunters — looking for any work they can lay their hands on — were among the first through the door, and as the day progressed it was mostly young people who thought working for the Flames arena would be fun.

Positions were available in areas including dining, security, kitchen and concessions. With about 300 positions available, there was still a fair amount of competition.

The job fair was scheduled to last until 8 p.m.

New Canadians speak about their new life in the country

DARRYL DYCK/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Shergo Kurdi lifts his shirt to reveal a pale, mottled patchwork of burn scars on his belly and chest — a legacy, he says, of years spent ironing fabric in a Turkish clothing factory after he and his family fled war-torn Syria in 2012.

Now, nine months after arriving in British Columbia with his parents and four siblings, the 15-year-old refugee is preparing to enter Grade 10 and wants to one day become a police officer.

"I like ... to help people," Shergo said, explaining that he likes the idea of giving back.

Shergo and his siblings are the cousins of Alan Kurdi, the Syrian toddler whose lifeless body was photographed on the shores of a Mediterranean beach last September. The picture spread across the globe and jarred the world into responding to the Syrian refugee crisis.

In the wake of the photograph, the Canadian government committed to taking in tens of thousands of displaced Syrians, a pledge that paved the way for the Kurdi family's arrival in late December.

Speaking in broken English at his aunt's home in Coquitlam, B.C., Shergo talked about how difficult his job was in Istanbul. Shifts sometimes lasted as long as 24 hours, he said, and frequently he didn't get paid.

The teen used a metaphor to explain how his life has been affected by the move to B.C.

"It's like a flower: (if) he doesn't have water he (will) die. Come to Canada, he has water and opens up again," he said. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Ethics watchdog examines Philpott

Ethics commissioner Mary Dawson is now examining whether Health Minister Jane Philpott violated the Conflict of Interest Act in her use of a high-end car service owned by a Liberal supporter.

Health Minister Jane Philpott

Dawson's probe, to be conducted in private, will focus on a section of the act pertaining to "preferential treatment."

It comes after Conservative health critic Colin Carrie wrote to the commissioner over the revelation that Philpott paid a limousine company $1,700 on one day for service and more than $1,900 on another day.

A public report will be issued once it is complete.

Philpott announced last Thursday she would repay the cost of these trips totalling just over $3,700, while admitting these were "excessive costs" related to her work travel. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Ashley Madison violated law: Report

Haley Ritchie
Metro | Ottawa

Privacy investigators in Canada and Australia have found that security guarantees on adultery dating website Ashley Madison were insufficient and the business violated privacy laws in both countries.

A joint investigation conducted by the Office of the Privacy Commissioner of Canada and the Office of the Australia Information Commissioner noted that some security measures did exist, but the company "did not have an adequate overarching information security framework."

In August last year those security issues made international headlines when the Canadian company's website was hacked into by a group called "The Impact Team."

Millions of international names, emails and personal information were released in a massive data dump.

The report released by investigators said that Ashley Madison knew that security was a "central part of the service" and reassured customers with security "awards" and statements on its front page.

The report found that the company had an obligation to provide a higher level of security if it was collecting personal information.

The privacy leak sparked fears in the capital, since Ashley Madison had previously claimed Ottawa had the most users across Canada. An analysis of the actual data revealed that claim was wrong.

> (The company) did not have an adequate overarching information security framework.
> Investigators' report

Ottawa-specific emails did include 543 accounts registered with a "gc.ca" email. As well, 207 users signed up with University of Ottawa email addresses, while there are 106 from Carleton University and 77 from Algonquin College.

Ashley Madison's parent company, Ruby Corp. — formerly known as Avid Life Media — has said the cyber attack cost it about a quarter of its annual revenue.

ASSIMILATION

Class action seeks answer to '60s 'cultural genocide'

Scores of aboriginals from across Ontario rallied Tuesday ahead of a landmark court hearing on whether the Canadian government robbed them of their cultural identities during a two-decade period in which native children were taken from their homes and placed with non-native families.

Some, who travelled for as long as two days to attend, listened as speakers denounced the '60s Scoop and what they called the "cultural genocide" perpetrated by the government against indigenous people. Speakers called the practice a deliberate effort to assimilate aboriginal children.

"I just want to say to Canada: We will not allow the harm of our children. We need to bring our children home, the ones that were lost, the ones that were stolen," lead plaintiff Marcia Brown Martel told the crowd.

Martel, a member of the Temagami First Nation near Kirkland Lake, Ont., was one of an estimated 16,000 aboriginal children who ended up in non-native homes. She later discovered the Canadian government had declared her original identity dead.

The '60s Scoop depended on a federal-provincial arrangement that operated from December 1965 to December 1984. The $1.3-billion class action argues that Canada failed to protect the children's cultural heritage, with devastating consequences to victims.

"Treaties do not give you permission to take our children," Regional Chief Isadore Day said.

Following the rally, the crowd marched behind traditional drummers to the nearby courthouse, where they filled the courtroom, to listen as their lawyer, Jeffery Wilson, called on Superior Court Justice Edward Belobaba to decide the case, which began in early 2009, based on the evidence he already has.

> We need to bring our children home, the ones that were lost, the ones that were stolen.
>
> Marcia Brown Martel, lead plaintiff

The unproven claim — it seeks $85,000 for each affected person — alleges the children suffered emotional, psychological and spiritual harm due to the devastating loss of a cultural identity that Canada negligently failed to protect.

Before court ended, Wilson cited a few words in Algonquin which he spelled out."Ati kati ci wepik," he said.

"We must never let this happen again." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Team set up to advise on Canada's economy

A team of federal advisers recruited to help resurrect Canada's sagging economic growth has been exploring opportunities around trade, infrastructure, innovation and labour markets, says the group's chair, Dominic Barton.

The council, created to provide advice to the Trudeau government, is scheduled to meet Finance Minister Bill Morneau in Toronto on Wednesday.

The meeting follows data showing that in May the country had its worst one-month performance in real gross domestic product in seven years - dating back to the darkest days of the Great Recession. Statistics Canada said the economy contracted 0.6 per cent that month, in large part due to the Alberta wildfires.

Barton, global managing director of the consulting firm McKinsey & Co., said the group is "driving along" four classic work streams.

Canada's rapidly aging population is one of the challenges that council members have been exploring, he added.

"We're going to have really big headwinds on labour-force participation over the next 10 to 15 years, so how do we get more people to participate in the economy?" said Barton, a Canadian who is a sought-after international expert who has advised governments and big companies with economic strategy.

Turkey, Syrian Kurds on track for conflict

Turkey signalled Tuesday it would step up its engagement in the Syrian war, as Turkish-backed Syrian rebels massed along the border to assault one of the last Syrian frontier towns held by Daesh militants.

Foreign Minister Mevlet Cavusolgu pledged "every kind" of support for operations against Daesh along a 100-kilometre stretch of Syrian frontier, putting the NATO member on track for a confrontation with U.S.-backed Kurdish fighters in Syria, who have been the most effective force against Daesh and who are eyeing the same territory.

Cavusolgu said Turkey would support twin operations stretching from the Syrian town of Afrin in the northwest, which is already controlled by Kurdish forces, to Jarablus, in the central north, which is held by Daesh.

"It is important that the terror organizations are cleansed from the region," Cavusolgu said in a joint news conference with his Hungarian counterpart.

Turkish artillery shelled Jarablus for the second consecutive day as reports circulated that Turkish-backed Syrian rebels were preparing to storm the town, a vital supply line and the last border point that directly connects Daesh with Turkey and the outside world.

The Britain-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights monitoring group said some 500 Syrian rebels were massed on the Turkish side of the border in preparation for an assault, including local fighters from Jarablus. One rebel at the border told the BBC the number was as high as 1,500 fighters.

Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Intent on undermining his Democratic rival, Trump and GOP backers are increasingly relying on rhetoric that academics and even some Republican strategists say has an undeniable edge focused on gender. His criticism of Clinton goes beyond "Crooked Hillary," and complaints about her use of a private email server as secretary of state and her foreign policy decisions.

Clinton, Trump said in a speech last week, "lacks the mental and physical stamina to take on (Daesh) and all the many adversaries we face."

He has repeatedly called attention to Clinton's voice, saying listening to her gives him a headache. Last December, he mocked her wardrobe. "She puts on her pantsuit in the morning," he told a Las Vegas audience.

A frequent point of criticism: Clinton doesn't look like a typical president.

"Now you tell me she looks presidential, folks," he said at a recent rally in New Hampshire.

Obama vows support for flood-ravaged state

LOUISIANA

President visited battered areas and consoled locals

Standing amid piles of waterlogged debris, President Barack Obama on Tuesday promised a sustained national effort to rebuild flood-ravaged southern Louisiana "even after the TV cameras leave" on a visit aimed in part at stemming campaign-season criticism that he's been slow to respond to the disaster.

As he toured a battered neighbourhood and spoke to local officials, Obama tried to buck up beleaguered residents of the water-soaked region.

"This is not a one-off, this is not a photo-op issue. I need all Americans to stay focused on this," he said. "I know how resilient the people of Louisiana are and I know that you will rebuild again."

Eleven years after Hurricane Katrina ravaged New Orleans, Obama's visit was a reminder of the political dangers and opportunities natural disasters pose for politicians. The president has been criticized for waiting until after he returned from his New England vacation to tour the Gulf Coast flooding. The timing, amid a heated presidential campaign, drew barbs from some local officials and Republicans political opponents, including GOP presidential candidate Donald Trump.

Trump visited Baton Rouge on Friday, enjoying a warm reception and allowing him to cast the president as golfing while Louisianans suffered.

"Too little too late," Mona Gaspard said of Obama's visit. The resident of Ascension Parish said she saw her home filled with 4 feet of water and resented what she saw from Obama. "I saw him play golf, not helping out over here. Trump was over here, but he wasn't," she said.

Others welcomed Obama and the spotlight he brought.

"It means a lot to know you have that support from the highest level," said Chrisena Brown, as the president surveyed the piles of discarded mattresses, broken appliances and heaps of clothing that line the curbs of her street.

U.S. wants to ban swimming with dolphins

Federal regulators are proposing to ban swimming with dolphins in Hawaii, a move that could imperil one of the Aloha State's most popular tourist delights and the industry that has sprung up around it.

The National Marine Fisheries Service says Hawaii's spinner dolphins — the nocturnal species that humans usually frolic with — are being deprived of rest during the day and becoming stressed out.

The agency was expected to announce the proposal Tuesday.

Swimming with dolphins is popular with visitors and some locals, with dozens of companies on Kauai, Oahu, Maui and the Big Island operating dolphin tours daily.

The proposed rule could shut down or greatly disrupt the industry as it now operates. That's because the ban would cover waters out to two nautical miles, which is where 98 per cent of Hawaii's spinner dolphins rest after they've spent the night feeding. Tour companies take customers to these nearshore waters to find dolphins.

Ann Garrett, assistant regional administrator of the National Marine Fisheries Service's protected resources division for the Pacific Islands, said dolphins have been found to be burning calories at a higher rate because they are forced to be vigilant as people approach their pods.

"All of these things can contribute to a reduction of fitness over time — this kind of chronic level of stress. That's what we're concerned about," Garrett said.

The agency plans to hold public meetings on the proposal next month and expects to make a final decision on the regulations next year.

Garrett said Tuesday that the agency aims to require swimmers, snorkelers and others in the water to stay at least 50 yards from the animals.

She said tour operators can follow this rule and still make a living. She said some already do so voluntarily.

Under the proposed rules, "those that are putting their people in the water to interact with dolphins, this would change the nature of what they're doing," she said. "They could still do snorkeling for other reasons - it's just not setting their people within a pod of dolphins or within 50 yards of a dolphin."

Winds fan wildfires

WESTERN U.S.

Crews target flames in several states

Growing wildfires stoked by windy, dry conditions have destroyed buildings and forced evacuations in California, Washington, Montana and elsewhere.

WYOMING: More firefighters headed to Yellowstone and Grand Teton national parks, where large, growing wildfires have closed or threaten key roads and forced the evacuation of a large campground during a busy stretch of the summer tourist season.

About 50 people have been evacuated from campgrounds and a lodge that rents cabins in the area.

CALIFORNIA: A wildfire on California's central coast grew Tuesday.

At least 2,400 people remained under evacuation orders in San Luis Obispo and Monterey counties, where the stubborn blaze had destroyed at least 36 residences.

Hearst Castle, the palatial ocean-view estate popular among tourists, remained closed because of its proximity to the flames.

WASHINGTON: Gov. Jay Inslee declared a state of emergency for 20 Washington state counties in response to wildfires that threaten homes and natural resources.

MONTANA: Firefighters contained a blaze that threatened about two dozen homes in Missoula County.

Evacuation orders for homes near Upper Grant Creek were lifted Tuesday afternoon but authorities asked non-residents to stay out of the area to keep the roadways clear.

IDAHO: Authorities ordered evacuations in eastern Idaho where a wildfire burning rangeland and habitat of a threatened bird, the sage grouse, ballooned.

The evacuations were ordered east of Idaho Falls, where up to 70 buildings were threatened near U.S. Highway 26.

OREGON: A fire in eastern Oregon near the Idaho state line was 60 per cent contained and threatening Succor Creek State Park.

Elsewhere, a blaze on national forest lands west of Unity was 40 per cent surrounded. Firefighters successfully extinguished small spot fires that erupted as wind-blown embers crossed fire lines.

UTAH: Crews were battling a small wildfire in northern Utah that was approaching a ski resort and a separate blaze in southern Utah burning through sage grouse habitat.

TRANSGENDER BATHROOMS

Texas ruling won't affect cases: Experts

Supporters of North Carolina's bathroom rules have urged a U.S. federal judge to closely consider a ruling in Texas that has temporarily blocked the Obama administration's ability to withhold federal money from schools that don't let transgender students use bathrooms matching their gender identity.

But opponents and independent legal experts said Tuesday that the ruling in Texas won't affect the North Carolina litigation.

"Although it sounds like this is all part of the same pot, the fact is there are multiple pots in the kitchen and different things cooking in the different pots," said Boston College law professor Kari Hong, who studies family law and LGBTQ rights. "The law is very good at compartmentalizing."

Attorneys for Gov. Pat McCrory, state legislative leaders and other defendants told U.S. District Judge Thomas Schroeder in Winston-Salem that the ruling in Texas "is pertinent and significant" to their defence of North Carolina law, which requires transgender people to use public restrooms matching the sex on their birth certificates.

Late Sunday, U.S. District Judge Reed O'Connor in Wichita Falls, Texas, blocked the Obama administration from requiring public schools to let transgender students use the bathrooms consistent with their gender identity. Texas is one of 13 states challenging the White House directive; North Carolina is not among them.

O'Connor wrote that his order would apply nationwide — an assertion immediately questioned by supporters of Obama's directive, who noted that higher courts elsewhere have upheld gender rights. O'Connor himself provided some wiggle room, writing that his order "should not unnecessarily interfere with litigation currently pending before other federal courts."

MEDICAL MARIJUANA

Whoopi eyes Canada to sell pot products

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's promise to legalize marijuana has grabbed the attention of many pot entrepreneurs — including Whoopi Goldberg, who's eyeing Canada as a potential market for her line of cannabis-infused menstrual pain products.

Whoopi Goldberg. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Goldberg's product line, which includes a THC tincture, a topical body rub, medicated bath salts and cannabis-infused cacao, is available only to medical marijuana patients in California. But the American comedian and talk-show host said she'd like to change that.

"It's going to take a minute," Goldberg said Monday in an interview, noting that making the products available north of the border will require overcoming a number of regulatory hurdles.

"You have to go through lots of different conversations."

Goldberg founded Whoopi & Maya alongside Maya Elisabeth, a California-based creator of medical cannabis products and the founder of Om Edibles.

In addition to cannabis, many of the products contain herbs and other natural ingredients — such as elderberries, cramp bark and ginger — that promise to alleviate some of the pain and discomfort that women experience during menstruation.

Startups finding new ways to recycle waste

GREEN ECONOMY

Ventures made viable through recycling metal and resales

When corporations renovate their offices, they pay hundreds of thousands of dollars to junk old furniture and equipment — 85 per cent of which ends up in the landfill.

That's a waste, according to Richard Beaumont, CEO of Toronto-based Green Standards. The company finds new homes for old office furniture and equipment at non-profit organizations that welcome used phones and chairs with open arms.

Unlike many environmental organizations, Green Standards has found a way to turn "reduce, reuse, recycle" into a workable business model. It focuses on a "triple bottom line," meaning performance is measured by profit, as well as the social and environmental benefits produced.

The company was originally a non-profit operating out of the U.K., which donated old office furniture to organizations in Africa.

But when it almost collapsed, Beaumont realized a new approach was needed. The for-profit model added resale, recycling valuable metals and a removal charge to make the premise scalable and cost-effective.

Green Standards is one of a small but growing number of Canadian businesses operating in the "circular economy," a system that aims for zero waste and no greenhouse gas emissions by using products to their potential.

PAUL WELLS ON WHAT THE CABINET TWEAKS SUGGEST

The most exhibitionist Canadian government in memory has released a new list of cabinet committees, and I can't shake the feeling that it means something.

In the bad old days of the Soviet Union, Western intelligence agencies used to grab at the tiniest details to figure out, in the absence of reliable information, who was up or down in Moscow. Seating orders on reviewing stands at May Day parades. The placement of articles in Pravda. Musical choices on state radio. Any scrap or tidbit.

One feels a bit ridiculous performing Kremlinology on the most exhibitionist Canadian federal government in memory. But Justin Trudeau released a new list of cabinet committees the other day, and I can't shake the feeling that it means something. So let's break out the calipers and magnifying glasses, and sift through the names for omens and portents of the Trudeau government's second year.

Cabinet committees meet frequently, some every week, to plan and organize the government's work. All government decisions filter up through the committee system. They matter. Trudeau and his advisors were flying nearly blind when they named the first committees. Most ministers had never been members of Parliament before. It was anyone's guess how they'd work together.

The new list leaves some committees almost unchanged, which suggests they're working fine. These include the powerful Treasury Board, which scrutinizes big spending decisions, and the Diversity and Inclusion committee. Apparently Trudeau does not worry he's being insufficiently diverse and inclusive. The "Inclusive Growth" committee gets a new name — "Growing the Middle Class" — and a diet, shrinking from 15 ministers to a dozen.

Among the ex-members of the committee on growing the middle class is Chrystia Freeland, which is odd: She wrote an entire book on growing the middle class. The Trudeau gang used to parade her as a guarantor of their economic credibility. Upon reflection, the PM seems to have decided the trade minister is more about foreign policy than the economy: she also departs from the Environment and Energy committee, but moves up to co-chair of Canada in the World and Public Security (one committee, long name). And she remains as chair of the Canada-U.S. Relations committee, which has much to worry about this autumn.

I love this bit: The committee on Agenda and Results, the all-powerful "deliverology" group chaired by the PM itself, grows by one word. It's now the committee on Agenda, Results and Communications. It is never too soon for a government to start worrying that it is not getting its message out. Even this one. Expect more methodical bragging about results, or rationalization of setbacks, as the case may be.

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau speaks to the media at the Liberal cabinet retreat in Sudbury, Ont., on Monday.
NATHAN DENETTE/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Biggest changes come last. First, there used to be a committee on Open and Transparent Government, and another on Parliamentary Affairs. They've merged. Now the Liberals' hopes for a happy-face democracy won't be considered in isolation from the grim realization that some stuff needs to get passed through a Parliament where optimism goes to die. Now the two sentiments will share a meeting room, and for hints about which sentiment has the upper hand, note that fisheries minister Dominic LeBlanc, a politico in the old style, is the committee's vice-chair, while his successor as government House leader, Bardish Chagger, is an ordinary member. Sad face.

Next: When Chagger replaced him as House leader last Friday, LeBlanc tweeted something opaque about looking forward to "additional responsibilities." Say hello to the new committee on Litigation Management, with LeBlanc as chairman.

This is the institutional admission of a timeless fact: all governments get sued a lot. This one does not expect to be spared, especially on issues related to reconciliation with First Nations. "Decisions on litigation matters often can't be left to lawyers," one senior Liberal told me. "Everything has important policy repercussions."

Finally, at Environment, a big move. Stéphane Dion, a former environment minister and Green Shifting Liberal Leader, is out as chair. Off the committee entirely. Replaced as chair by heritage minister Mélanie Joly, who was not previously known for her views on energy policy. It's all about who gets along well with others, and Dion, who had a hard time letting colleagues take any initiative on his pet file, has been sent packing.

Dion is not banished to Siberia, precisely. He shows up on the Defence Procurement committee, where his eye for detail may help avoid huge spending boondoggles. But his move suggests that in some ways, the real cabinet shuffle was hidden in these endless lists of names.

Stanford's response to rape: Endorse the rapist's rationalization

Good God, Stanford.

Apparently, it's not bad enough that the school's last name these days is "rape." It had to go ahead and align itself with the rapists.

On Monday, the university moved to "reduce the availability and accessibility of hard alcohol." The school is banning all large containers over 750 ml of hard alcohol, and banning it altogether from on-campus parties. The policy grew from president John Hennessy's request in March for student input on curbing alcohol use.

To be sure, a conversation around campus drinking culture is warranted. This policy, however, is about considerably more than that. It began a full year after Brock Turner, a student, was indicted for rape, sexual assault and attempted rape. It began in the midst of a media storm around the case, during the very month of the trial, which saw Turner convicted of three charges of felony sexual assault.

And this new alcohol policy has come out amid a campus terrain irrevocably changed. The Stanford rape victim's now famous letter to the court has galvanized an entire world over the injustice of sexual assault and, most particularly, Turner's insulting, insidious, arrogant and vicious excuse that, in effect, partying made him do it.

Let's have the victim speak again from that statement: "Again, you were not wrong for drinking. Everyone around you was not sexually assaulting me. You were wrong for doing what nobody else was doing, which was pushing your erect dick in your pants against my naked, defenseless body concealed in a dark area."

Clearly, Stanford University disagrees. The booze policy, which can only be read as a measure to stem sexual violence, lets predators — and the university itself — off the hook by accepting the argument that alcohol is to blame.

In a tweet from Michele Dauber, a law professor at Stanford and the school's own worst critic: "Alcohol must be in bottle small enough so you can use it "secretly" so @Stanford isn't blamed when you rape someone."

At one point, the alcohol policy even made the alcohol-as-rape defence explicit, in a section that has since been removed from the website. Titled "Alcohol affects both sexual intent and aggression," the section noted that women who drink are "perceived to be more sexually available," that men who are drinking feel more aroused by "rape scenarios" and that women should thus "take action to protect friends."

I have been drunk. I have been obliterated. I have blacked out. And I have never, ever sexually assaulted another person or wanted to. If men feel differently, the problem isn't with booze.

The problem is with men.

Bashir Munye uses Somalia, Italy in his nomadic dishes

Karon Liu
Torstar News Service

To be hung up on the idea of authenticity or what ingredients or cooking techniques should be allowed in certain cuisines means missing out on chef Bashir Munye's feasts of buttermilk chicken livers with baharat, saffron-honey peach almond cake, and thick-cut chickpea fries with spicy harissa dip.

If there's one person who encapsulates Toronto's multicultural food scene, this is the guy.

"The food is authentic to me as Bashir who was born in Somalia, raised in Italy, married a woman from Barbados and lived in Toronto for 21 years," says the chef and owner of My Little Dumplings in Leslieville. "Food is a celebration of where I've been and where I want to be, not about creating boundaries just so I could be defined."

Munye's customers normally know him as the guy at the Evergreen Brick Works farmers market serving steamed baos and dumplings filled with global flavours including jerk chicken, sweet chili beef and falafel batter made from ground edamame. Earlier this year he opened a bricks-and-mortar location at Queen St. E. and Greenwood Ave. and now he's gearing up to do a dinner series on Fridays and Saturdays that celebrates what he calls "nomadic cooking" — food that explores Africa's vast culinary regions mixed with his family's Somali background, Italian upbringing and local ingredients.

"Food for me is always fluid as people travel and migrate throughout history," he says. "Somali food is a melting pot because of its geographical location. It's on the coastline so there's influences from India, European colonialism, and the original Bantus people.

"As a Somali person, our history and culture are nomadic by nature," he says. "Chefs are nomadic as well, going from kitchen to kitchen, learning and growing. I'm taking this philosophy of a long journey."

Little Dumplings owner Bashir Munye is doing a private dinner series showcasing Moor cuisine (Muslims from North Africa, Iberia and Malta during the Middle Ages). TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

At a trial dinner for his yet-to-be-named dinner series, Munye billed the night as a "Moorish Supper." The Moors are Muslim people from the North African and Mediterranean region during the Middle Ages. About 20 of us are sitting without our shoes in a circle on the floor in Munye's little restaurant, which tonight is lined with woven carpets and pillows the chef borrowed from his aunts. His son is helping out in the kitchen along with Munye's fellow chef Damon Clements.

His cousins are playing hostesses for the evening, bringing plates of fermented carrots, mushroom conserva with artichokes and marinated beef tongue with fresh herbs.

Giant bowls of tomato-garlicky okra with preserved lemon and smoky sumac-spiced eggplant complement the show-stopping main of juicy roasted lamb saddle stuffed with aromatic basmati rice, pine nuts, pistachios and currents. These are the timeless, belly-warming and comforting flavours you'd expect from a grandmother who spent all day in the kitchen.

In addition wanting to make diners come back for more of his food, Munye's goal is to get aspiring black cooks to be proud of their culinary heritage, especially when much of today's western food culture is still heavily skewed toward a European palate (ie: how many non-white chefs do you see on TV and magazines?).

Eden Hagos, founder of the Toronto-based Black Foodie blog, which showcases African, Caribbean and southern American cuisine, hopes Munye's cooking will change people's perceptions of African cooking, that within each country there are regional variations and that there's a world beyond the Ethiopian restaurants in downtown Toronto.

Food for me is always fluid as people travel and migrate throughout history
Chef Bashir Munye

"I think when a lot of people think of African food, they think of Ethiopian food. As an Ethiopian person, I love that (these restaurants are) serving different audiences but there's amazing West African food, and people from other parts of East Africa like Bashir playing with flavours and changing peoples' perceptions," she says.

Despite a long culinary history and a wealth of talent in the city, Hagos says African and Caribbean cooking have largely been pigeonholed as takeout and mostly written from a Eurocentric perspective in mainstream food culture. Nonetheless he is happy to see that more of its chefs, restaurants, and food events are now in the long overdue spotlight.

"He doesn't fit into one box and I'm glad he has that attitude," says Hagos.

"I think he represents a lot of the diaspora here. My dad also lived in Italy and we make lasagna with berbere and baharat in it. We grew up with that and we're not a monolith culture."

Munye's dumpling shop will remain open during regular business during the week, while his dinners will take place on Friday and Saturday evenings at the restaurant. Each night a single seating, where everyone sits on the floor and enjoys communal dining at $80 per person. The first dinner Sept. 1 is already sold out, but Munye says the dinners will be happening regularly beginning Sept. 9.

"I'm comfortable in my own skin. I don't have to think about boundaries or ask permission about what people want," says Munye.

"I cook what I love to cook and what my friends and family ate. This is an extension of who I am."

Fill your kitchen with the scent of Thai curry

RECIPE

This quick dish makes a perfect midweek meal

The scent of Thai curry cooking is very possibly one of the greatest kitchen smells ever.

Ingredients like lemongrass, chilies, garlic, ginger, coconut milk, and spices like coriander and cumin all mingle together to create a heady perfume that pulls people to the table.

There are as many versions of Thai curry as there are provinces of the country — perhaps as many as there are Thai cooks. Thailand is at the centre of Southeast Asia, and its cooking has influenced and been influenced by the cuisines of many countries, from India to China.

While making your own curry paste is an interesting and rewarding experience, opening a jar of Thai curry paste is by far the easiest solution for a weeknight dinner. It's available in the Asian section of supermarkets, and online.

Fish sauce is a traditional ingredient in Thai and other Southeast Asian cuisines. It is made from fermented anchovies or other seafood, and has a pungent smell, but when a small amount is employed in a recipe it adds a bracing, salty flavour that calls your taste buds to attention.

If you like Thai food, you probably like fish sauce. Start with a small amount, and add more from there.

The sauce of this curry is fairly thin.

If you want a thicker sauce, stir a couple of teaspoons of cornstarch into 2 tablespoons of water and add with the coconut milk. Either way, you'll want to serve it with plenty of rice to soak up the delicious liquid.

Thai Green Pork Curry

Cooking time: 30 mins

Servings: 6

Ingredients:

- 1 tablespoon unsalted butter
- 1 tablespoon vegetable or peanut oil
- 1 onion, halved and thinly sliced
- 2 garlic cloves, minced
- 3 tablespoons Thai green curry paste
- 1 tablespoon minced fresh ginger
- 1 red bell pepper, slivered
- 1 1/2 cups chicken broth
- 1 (14-ounce) can coconut milk
- 1 tablespoon fish sauce or soy sauce
- 2 cups small cauliflower florets
- 4 cups cubed pork loin
- 1 (15-ounce) can chickpeas, rinsed and drained
- 3/4 cup slivered fresh basil leaves
- 1 tablespoon fresh lime juice
- 6 cups hot cooked white or jasmine rice to serve
- Lime wedges to serve

Directions:

1. In a large pot over medium high heat, melt the butter with the oil. Add the onion and garlic and saute until tender, about 4 minutes. Add the curry paste and ginger and stir until you can smell the spices. Stir in the bell pepper, then add the broth and coconut milk and bring to a gentle simmer (do not let the mixture boil or it might separate or curdle).

2. Add the fish sauce or soy sauce, and the cauliflower. Simmer for 5 minutes, until the cauliflower starts to become tender. Add the pork and the chickpeas and simmer, stirring occasionally, for 7 to 10 minutes, until the pork is cooked and the cauliflower is tender. Stir in the basil and lime juice and serve over the hot rice, with the lime wedges on the side to squeeze over.

Skirt steak makes for Tex-Mex fiesta

Tangy tomatoes, corn, and black beans complement grilled steak. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RECIPE

Humble cut of beef is rich on flavour, pairs with fresh sides

Associated with Tex-Mex tacos and fajitas, skirt steak prized for its flavour, especially the outside skirt steak, but must be cut against the grain of the meat or it's hard to chew. You can marinate it or grill it over a medium high heat, about 550 degrees, with nothing but olive oil and kosher salt.

This recipe is a nod to skirt steak's humble roots. The tomato and corn salsa cuts the richness of the beef and adds freshness to the dish. The beer-braised black beans are coarsely mashed with onion and garlic and doused with fresh lime juice just before serving. And the tortillas are optional.

Make the beans before you start the salsa and the steak or the steak will get cold while the beans finish cooking.

Grilled Skirt Steak with Beer-braised Black Beans & Blistered Corn and Tomato Salsa
Serves 4

Ingredients:
- Beer-Braised Black Beans
- Blistered Corn and Tomato Salsa
- 1 lb. outside skirt steak
- kosher salt
- olive oil

Beer-Braised Black Beans:
- olive oil
- 4 garlic cloves, finely chopped
- 1 small white onion, chopped
- 1 tsp ground cumin
- 2x15-ounces cans black beans, rinsed and drained
- 1x12-ounce Mexican or domestic beer
- juice of one lime
- zest of one lime
- Chopped fresh cilantro to taste, about 2 Tbsp

Blistered Corn and Tomato Salsa:
- 2 large ripe garden tomato, chopped, or pint grape or cherry tomatoes, washed and cut into quarters
- 2 ears of corn, shucked and blistered on the grill
- 2 Tbs[ chopped cilantro, plus sprigs for garnish
- juice of one lime
- kosher salt
- tortillas: Optional

Directions:

1. About 45 minutes before you want to eat, heat 2 Tbsp oil in heavy large saucepan over medium-high heat. Add garlic, onions and cumin. Sauté until onions begin to brown. Add beans and beer to sautéed vegetables and cook 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. Mash beans with the back of a fork. Continue simmering until thick, stirring frequently, about 10 minutes. Keep warm while you grill the meat and make the salsa. Just before serving, season to taste with lime juice, salt and pepper. Transfer mixture to a bowl. Sprinkle with lime zest and cilantro.

2. Preheat grill with all burners on high and reduce heat to a medium-high direct heat. Brush corn with olive oil and sprinkle with salt. Place directly on cooking grates and grill 3-4 minutes. Turn corn occasionally to roast and blister all sides. Remove to a clean platter. When the corn is cool enough to handle, remove the from cob by standing the cob on end and running a sharp knife down to remove kernels.

3. Wash and chop tomatoes into halves or quarters, reserving juices and transfer to a large glass bowl. Cut blistered corn and add it to the tomatoes, add lime juice a little at a time, tasting and adding until you think the balance of the tomato juice with the lime is right. Season with salt, stir and toss in the chopped cilantro. Let sit until ready to serve. Do not make too far in advance or you will lose the flavours of the fresh-cut tomatoes.

3. Brush steak with olive oil and season steak with about 1/2 tsp of kosher salt just before placing on the grill. Place meat directly on the cooking grates and grill for 3-4 minutes. Turn once halfway through cooking. Grill a total of 6-8 minutes for medium rare. Remove to a clean platter and let rest for 5-7 minutes before carving across the grain. Serve with the braised black beans and the salsa.

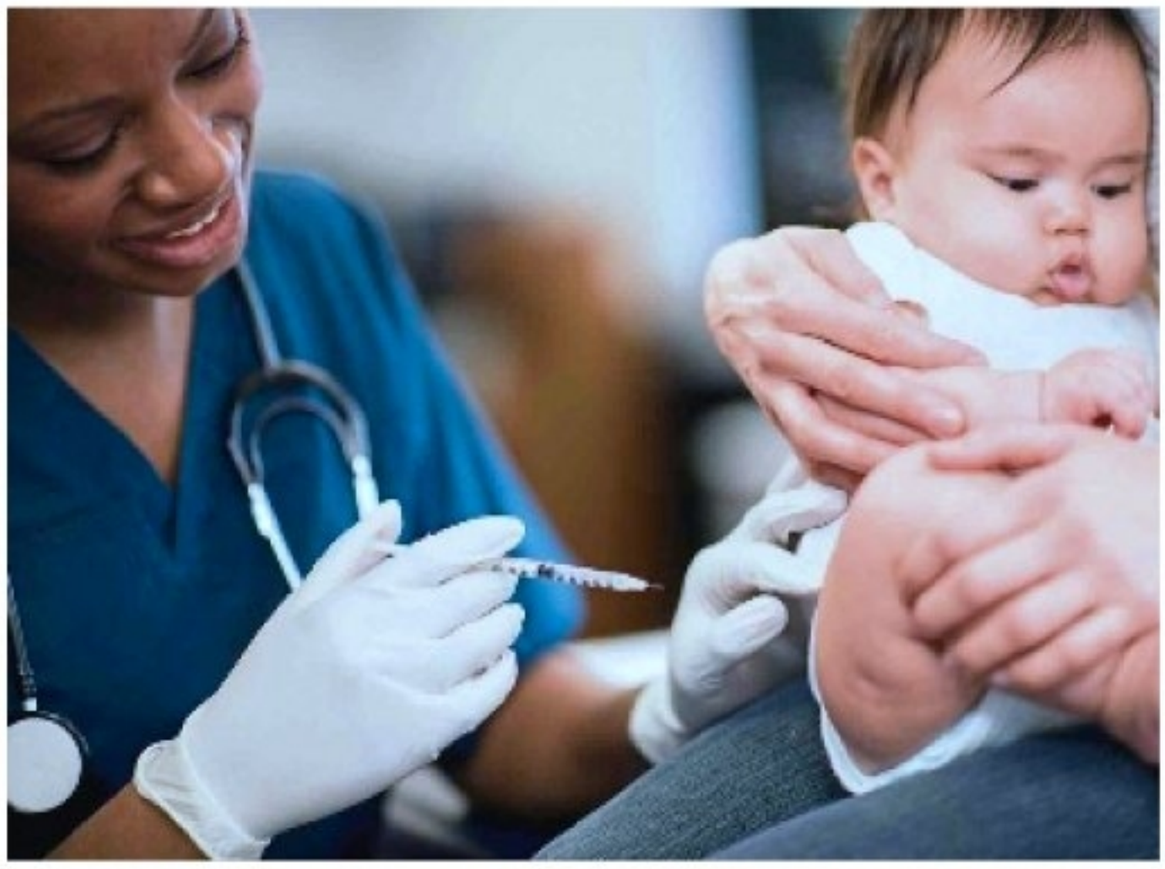
Well before Donald Trump started preaching a love of masonry, French winemakers were building their own wall: one that has successfully blocked average wine drinkers from accessing their wines.

Stodgy labels, complicated regulations and perceived high prices (relative to the wines from just about anywhere else) have all acted as mortar for the barricade.

Though wine from France's prestigious Bordeaux and Burgundy regions have suffered the most from consumer disinterest, winemakers in the southern regions of the country are starting to make inroads with their fruit-forward juice and rules that allow them to put grape names on their front panels.

Corbières, a red heavy subregion of the massive Languedoc-Roussillon, requires its wines be made with at least two grapes. Gérard Bertrand's 2013 Terroir Corbières ($16.95-$19.99) uses three: Grenache, Syrah and Mourvèdre.

Rich, ripe and layered with plump black fruit, it will help break down the barrier between you and all that French wines have to offer.



A report by the Canadian Institute for Health Information (CIHI) put the number of doctors across the country in 2015 at more than 82,000. ISTOCK

Cost of paying for doctors increases

REPORT FINDINGS

Overall cost of services rose almost 4% to $25 billion

A new report shows the number of physicians in Canada grew last year as did the overall cost of their services, which rose almost four per cent to $25 billion.

The report by the Canadian Institute for Health Information (CIHI) tallied the number of doctors across the country in 2015 at more than 82,000.

For the ninth year running, the number of physicians increased at a faster rate than the population. There are now more doctors per person than ever before — 228 for every 100,000 Canadians.

The average gross clinical payment for a physician remained virtually unchanged at $339,000. But this amount varied by type of specialty: on average, family doctors were paid $271,000; medical specialists received $338,000; and surgical specialists took in $446,000.

Geoff Ballinger, CIHI manager of physician information, said it's important to realize that in most cases the average payment estimates don't include practice overhead costs such as staff salaries, office rent, and medical equipment and supplies.

Based on the number of MD degrees awarded by Canadian universities, the number of physicians is likely to continue expanding. In 2015, Canadian universities awarded 2,817 MD degrees, a slight increase from the previous year. Between 2011 and 2015, the number of MD degrees awarded in Canada increased by 12 per cent.

"Understanding the supply, payments and activities of physicians across the country helps us to understand not only how many physicians there are and how much we pay for their services, but also how healthcare resources are allocated," Ballinger said in a release.

Also from the report:

- There were regional differences in the changes to the number of doctors. Saskatchewan and Alberta each saw increases of approximately five per cent over the previous year, while there was a two per cent decrease in Newfoundland and Labrador, and a three per cent decline in New Brunswick.
- The number of physicians per capita has gone up in all provinces since 2011. In 2015, Nova Scotia had the most physicians per 100,000 population (261), followed by Newfoundland and Labrador (243) and Quebec (242). The provinces with the fewest physicians per 100,000 were P.E.I. (181), Saskatchewan (196) and Manitoba (204).
- The proportion of female doctors in Canada continued to rise. In 2015, almost 40 per cent of all physicians in Canada were female, up from 36.5 per cent in 2011. By comparison, the number of male practitioners grew by 7.3 per cent.
- In 2014-2015, the average fee-per-service payment to physicians was $62.23. Family doctors' average billing was $45.61 per service, while the average for medical and surgical specialists was $79.81 and $87.26 per service, respectively.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

BY THE NUMBERS

228

There are now more doctors per person than ever before — 228 for every 100,000 Canadians.

$366K

CIHI says the average gross clinical payment per physician varied across the county — from $258,000 in Nova Scotia to $366,000 in Alberta.

45%

Women accounted for a larger proportion of family medicine physicians (45 per cent) than specialists (35 per cent).

A less complicated Game of Thrones

THE SHOW: Vikings, Season 1, Episode 5
THE MOMENT: The sexy mythology

Vikings is a less costly Game of Thrones but sails closer to truth and history. CONTRIBUTED

Snuggled around a crackling fire, bold Viking chief Ragnar Lothbrok (Travis Fimmel); his fierce wife Lagertha (Katheryn Winnick); his best pal Floki (Gustaf Skarsgard); and Floki's wife Helga (Maude Hirst) teach Athelstan (George Blagden) — a monk Ragnar captured on a raid in England — about Valhalla.

The mood is boozy, sexy, sleepy. They all touch one another as they talk, and each sentence is uttered dramatically.

"The roof is made out of shields," Floki intones. "The rafters are spears. It has 540 doors, and when Ragnarok comes, 800 warriors will march out of each door shoulder to shoulder."

"What is Ragnarok?" Athelstan asks. All fall silent. Clearly, Ragnarok is taboo.

"Well then, how was the earth created?" Athelstan ventures.

"The earth was made from Ymir's flesh and oceans from his blood," Helga purrs. "The gods made hills out of his bones and trees from his hairs. The sky dome is his skull."

"How do you think it was made, priest?" Floki asks.

Athelstan opens his mouth, but has no words.

Welcome, friends, to Vikings, a less costly, less complicated Game of Thrones, with the added benefit of truthier history-ness.

Wrap yourself in furs and smear blood on your face, shave parts of your hair and braid the rest (including some truly scary beard braids), and enjoy lots of axe-wielding blood-letting, punctuated by many candle-lit three-ways. Because these Northfolk may be weaving the first strands of a social safety net, and experimenting with democratic equality. But they also know, way better than the pale English, how to get down.

Varsity awarded for customer satisfaction

CONTRIBUTED

It's Gold for Varsity Chrysler Dodge Jeep. The Calgary new and used vehicle dealership has been awarded the 2016 DealerRater.ca Customer Satisfaction Award. Varsity also scored the Consumer Choice Award for 2016.

DealerRater is global in scope with over 2 million credited reviews. Dealership staff are rated according to customer service, quality of work, friendliness, pricing, the overall experience and would the customer recommend the dealer. The Five Star winning Varsity dealers scored five out of five on each and every one of the listed criteria including the rate of recommendations.

Sales consultant Randy Brodeur has earned his Five Star review for his diligent and caring approach to customer satisfaction.

"From our first visit to this dealership because we were in the neighborhood to the second visit, what a pleasant salesman we had," says Michael E. "Randy Brodeur was polite, not pushy at all and very knowledgeable. There was no pressure at all and I had to wonder if we were really at a car dealership based on my past experiences. I would definitely come back again and not hesitate to recommend this dealership and especially Randy to my friends."

Dealership staff are rated according to customer service, quality of work, friendliness, pricing, the overall experience and whether or not the customer would recommend the dealer. The Five Star winning Varsity dealers scored five out of five on each and every one of the listed criteria including the rate of recommendations.

Jamie D. says he would recommend the entire team at Varsity, from sales through to financing.

"Our salesman Brad Gavey was very helpful in ensuring we received everything we were looking for in a vehicle," says Jamie on DealerRater. "We are extremely pleased with his friendliness, and genuine personality. He was exceptional in communicating and meeting our needs. He walked us through the whole process and was very helpful. Justin Migneault and Scott Martin were very professional and are very focused on customer satisfaction. Tony Bedard made the financing process painless and was very friendly as well. Thank you to Varsity for providing top notch customer satisfaction. I highly recommend this team."

Multiple recommendations and reviews from real people posting about their real experiences is the ideal source to find a trustworthy dealership. The judges have made a decision, Varsity Chrysler stands tall on the podium of customer satisfaction.

Find the car of your more realistic dreams

Varsity Chrysler Dodge Jeep has one of Calgary's largest inventories of used cars, trucks and SUVs, including many under $10K. Although the dealership specializes in Chrysler product their inventory extends to all makes and models of vehicles.

Their website varsitychrysler.com has a section devoted to the Under $10K buyers which offers a comprehensive and convenient way to search for the car of your more realistic dreams. The inventory is searchable by year, make and kilometres and body styles. Each listings comes with photographs and/or video of the vehicle and there is a link to the vehicle history by way of CarProof.

An online chat with a customer service representative from Varsity is available in case there are any issues accessing or if you have questions not answered on the website.

No matter the price point Varsity's consideration of the customer's needs is always a priority. No interest payments for one year, employee pricing, award winning staff, custom credit solutions, an awareness of the big picture of the economy and how it affects people, a caring customer first attitude, all available.

Varsity Chrysler staff care about moving customers, not just moving cars. Getting you the vehicle you need regardless of your budget is job number one.

Custom credit solutions

1. Varsity deals with all lenders, not just special finance institutions.
2. Allows all customers to truly repair their credit and have access to the main banks with better interest rates.
3. Unlike just used car lots, besides our larger selection of pre-owned vehicles, our customers have access to new vehicles at preferred interest rates backed by the manufacturer with new warranties included.
4. The lower the interest rate the more of your money pays for your vehicle resulting in a more equitable situation and probably less maintenance costs.
5. As a franchised dealer, Varsity's stricter standard of reconditioning a used car allows their customer to start with a certified pre-owned vehicle they can have complete confidence in, not just because it was the only one that fit their credit situation.
6. Trade your high-interest car loan in for a reduced interest rate on a newer car.
7. Shop the industry's leading website, submit your credit application securely and conveniently online at varsityautocredit.com.
8. Credit bureau is reported on all loans giving you an improved credit report.
9. Every customer is treated with dignity and respect with an understanding of Alberta's economic atmosphere.
10. Varsity is committed to a discrete approach to individual issues and offers a long term solution to customer's automotive needs.

Cruze is safe, but you won't be sorry

HANDOUT

REVIEW

This compact is not exciting, but it is cheap and dependable

Craig Cole
AutoGuide.com

Sallying forth into the heart of the compact-car segment is the all-new 2016 Chevrolet Cruze.

This unexpectedly reserved offering is set to battle popular options like the Honda Civic, Toyota Corolla and Ford Focus, bringing a multitude of wholesome attributes to the fray.

It seems like GM's product planners have aggressively played to the segment's base by designing a car with loads of interior space, a roomy trunk, refined interior and seriously little excitement. The Cruze plays it safe in a segment that's often dominated by stuffy traditionalism.

But just because it isn't the most exciting compact model on the market doesn't mean it totally lacks any upsides. This Chevy offers a gigantic trunk measuring up to 0.42 cubic metres. The frosting on this cake of convenience is that said volume is easily accessed through a large opening with a low lift-over height.

The Cruze's aft accommodations are unexpectedly spacious in all three dimensions, though a touch more headroom would be appreciated. Another boast-worthy feature, its rear backrests fold nearly flat for even more storage space.

The 2016 Cruze is larger yet simultaneously lighter than its predecessor; it's also more efficient to boot. Enabling all of this, the car has gone on a massive diet, losing up to 115 kilograms with this redesign, which is, frankly, astounding for a compact car because there just isn't that much there to begin with.

Tucked beneath its short hood is a muscular little motor that pulls like a much larger engine.

Two gearboxes are offered in the new Cruze, each with six gears. Our tester was graced with the automatic, but a manual is also on the menu. This self-shifter keeps the EcoTec four-banger in the meaty portion of its powerband and helps deliver impressive fuel economy.

Inside, this car's cockpit is a mostly pleasant place. It's constructed almost exclusively of hard plastic, which is not an issue in this case because it's handsomely textured. Think of it as ground round that tastes like sirloin steak. Fabric trim on the dashboard also adds a touch of class.

THE CHECKLIST | 2016 CHEVROLET CRUZE

6 'STAR CARS' AS CHOSEN BY JEREMY CLARKSON

Fans of Top Gear are well aware that Jeremy Clarkson provides insight into cars and is more than just an entertainment personality. He recently published a list of his "Star Cars" and some of his choices may surprise you. He says driving these cars give him the "fizz," which is a rare feeling of an intimate connection between car and driver that makes a vehicle exciting to drive. JASON SIU/AUTOGUIDE.COM

1 Alfa Romeo 4C Coupe

If you watched the episode of Top Gear where Richard Hammond, piloting an Alfa Romeo 4C, races Clarkson who takes a more... unconventional approach, you will already know how much Clarkson adores the Alfa Romeo 4C. He does acknowledge that there are a few issues with the car, namely that there is almost no rear visibility and that it's noisy, but he still adores it. That's because the Alfa Romeo 4C isn't like all those other high-tech cars out there that feel like machines, the 4C, even with all its flaws, feels human, according to Clarkson.

2 BMW M2

There have been plenty of times when Clarkson turns to BMW's M division when it comes to challenges on Top Gear and something tells us, if the need arises on The Grand Tour, the M2 will be in his bag of tricks. "It's not just fast in a straight line," he says. "It's also fast through the corners. And not just fast, but a complete delight. It's so good that in a few bends, I was actually dribbling with joy."

3 Ford Mustang GT

You might think this is one of the most surprising cars on the list. The Ford Mustang is available in the U.K. for the first time ever, and Clarkson has very little reason not to love it. He does admit that it's too heavy to be considered a sports car in his mind, but it is a muscle car to the truest form and "is a machine that wants to turn its tires into smoke and go round every corner sideways."

6 Vauxhall Zafira Tourer Tech Line

Clarkson's review of the Vauxhall Zafira Tourer is a story in itself, in which he claims the car he reviewed was borrowed from Bono. "There's no flowery way of putting this, so I'll just come straight out with it," he says in the review. "Bono drives a Vauxhall Zafira diesel." And apparently for good reason, as it managed to land on Clarkson's list of Star Cars. He even says it's the most comfortable car in the world.

5 Lamborghini Aventador

The Lamborghini Aventador didn't make the list because it's brilliant to drive ... because well, it's not in Clarkson's eyes. "The Aventador is not the best supercar to drive. It feels big and heavy. And if you go for a hot lap of a racetrack, you'd better not think about doing another, because the brakes will fade and then fail." But for all its faults, Clarkson loves the Aventador because it's a true sports car unlike the new generation of hybrid supercars.

4 Volvo XC90 D5 AWD

This is probably the most surprising car on the list, considering Clarkson loves power. Oh, and it's not a Land Rover! Despite finding the Volvo XC90 really big, Clarkson praises the SUV's interior, technology and ride comfort. It also seems like he's accepting the fact that self-driving cars are on their way: "If you let the driving aids do their thing, it becomes quite relaxing, because the 2.0-litre engine is far quieter than in the old model."

Type of damage will determine remedy

Sami Haj-Assaad
AutoGuide.com

We've all been driving along, minding our own business when a rock the size of a melon comes flying like a targeted asteroid and smacks right into your windshield, leaving a chip or crack in your car's visor and ruining your day.

In reality, that rock probably wasn't all that big, but driving at speed certainly makes the scene more dramatic. What's not to be taken lightly is that mark on your windshield. Cracks and chips in your window may not seem like a big deal, but they impact your visibility and are a safety hazard.

If you're left with a serious imperfection on your windshield, it may be tempting to just ignore it or look around it to save time and money, but leaving the crack or chip and driving around with it is not an option.

"Cracks and chips often grow longer or wider if not repaired or replaced," explains Debra Levy, president of the Auto Glass Safety Council (AGSC). Not only that, but it's also unsafe.

"The (cracked) glass may be compromised and the windshield is part of the safety system of the vehicle," she explains.

There are two main solutions to dealing with a broken windshield. You can either fill a crack if it's small enough, or you can replace the whole windshield. The latter is the more expensive option, while the former is for smaller imperfections. It's like dealing with serious body damage or chipped paint, but your windshield is much more important in terms of your safety than your car's paint.

"Whether or not a break can be repaired, rather than replacing the glass, depends on a number of factors including type of break, location of break and amount of time the glass has been broken," Levy says. But what's important is that it gets fixed soon, as Levy explained that cracks and chips can grow longer or wider if not repaired or replaced.

The decision to repair a crack or chip can be easy to make depending on the size of it.

"The Repair of Laminated Auto Glass Standard allows repair of cracks 14 inches (36 centimetres) or less," she explains, so cracks that are larger than that will need a complete replacement of glass. Obviously, the ability to repair such big cracks or chips is dependent on the skills of the auto glass technician you're using. Most small chips are commonly dealt with, but again, it depends on what your tech says is possible.

"Certain insurers also limit the length of damage they will pay for."

That should help the decision.

Some quick research shows that certain types of cracks and chips just can't be repaired. For example, if the damage extends from the exterior pane of glass and penetrates the interior, it's too deep to be repaired. Chips on corners or tight spots are often too difficult to repair too, so count those out. If a chip or crack has spread after the initial damage, that's a clear sign the glass needs to be replaced.

A crack or chip repair takes about 30 to 40 minutes and is performed by injecting a clear resin into it. When it hardens, the resin helps restore the integrity and smooth look of the glass. The resin is then polished and cured by UV light. If done properly, the chip or crack won't be able to spread any further.

Replacing a glass is a bit more of an involved process. After prepping the body of the car to prevent any damage, technicians will remove the windshield from the car. The seals and adhesives are also removed, and a primer is used on the bare frame, so a new glue and sealant can applied for the replacement glass. The new windshield is then fitted and bonded to the car. After the glass is fitted, most auto shops encourage a 60-minute wait time so that the windshield is properly attached to the car.

IN BRIEF

Lotus Evora 400 gets lighter

The Lotus Evora 400 has new options that can reduce its weight to 1,353 kilograms. Continuing with its mantra that "light is right," Lotus has introduced a new carbon package, lithium-ion battery and titanium exhaust options for the Evora 400. Available in all markets where the car is sold, the new options aims to cut a total of 15 kg from the already lightweight sports car. Those looking to shave even more weight can opt for the 2+0 seating configuration and no A/C.

"The Lotus Evora 400 is already the lightest car in its segment, with super car performance, benchmark handling and the purity of the driving experience expected of a Lotus," said Lotus CEO Jean-Marc Gales.

FORD FOCUS RS

Free driving school

Ford is offering a complimentary RS Adrenaline Academy Driving Experience to Focus RS owners. The program is being offered to initial owners of 2016 and 2017 Ford Focus RS models, so that owners get a chance to learn first-hand the capabilities of their hot hatch. The program takes place at Utah Motorsports Campus in Grantsville, Utah, and the schedule will be announced later this year. According to Ford, the RS Adrenaline Academy Driving Experience provides owners with a full immersion into the performance and handling characteristics of the Focus RS. The extensive course teaches skills like braking, shifting and cornering techniques, while focusing on the particular dynamics of the Focus RS, like the car's four driving modes.

BMW i3 gets 183 kilometre range

The 2017 BMW i3 will officially go 183 kilometres on a single full charge. When BMW announced the upgraded BMW i3 earlier this year with a 94 Ah battery, the automaker estimated that it would offer 40 per cent more range than the 2016 model. That estimate seems to be accurate now that the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has made it official. The EPA hasn't rated the BMW i3 with the on-board range extender yet. The new battery has a higher capacity, but is the same dimensions as the regular battery thanks to higher energy density. JASON SIU/AUTOGUIDE.COM

MERCEDES-AMG GT R

A standout at Pebble Beach

The Mercedes-AMG GT R was a star attraction at the Benz display at Pebble Beach this year as the most performance-oriented car in the brand's lineup right now. Mercedes-AMG claims that it has never put this much motorsports technology in any production car ever. Developed at the infamously gruelling Nurburgring, it was bred for blazing lap times. The suspension has been extensively modified and the aerodynamics are new. It also gets a more aggressive look, an enormous center-mounted exhaust, and a unique grille from the rest of the AMG GT lineup.

A hero's welcome

OLYMPICS

Adoring fans greet athletes returning from Brazil

Two planeloads of Canadian Olympians returned home from Rio to a hero's welcome, as flag-waving fans clamoured for autographs and cheering family members offered up homecoming hugs.

Several members of Team Canada, including star swimmer Penny Oleksiak, landed at Toronto's Pearson International Airport around 6 a.m., with another group of athletes scheduled to arrive at around the same time Wednesday.

When the flights arrived, airport firefighters saluted the returning athletes with giant arcs of water on either side of the airplanes.

Loud cheers went up as the Olympians came through the arrivals gate, some stopping to talk to media, others heading straight to waiting family members.

Soccer player Ashley Lawrence's parents donned Team Canada shirts to welcome their daughter. The pair said they are looking forward to figuring out where to display the midfielder's bronze medal.

Lawrence's teammate, Jessie Fleming, said she was proud of their performance.

"We all had a good tournament and we definitely deserved to bring this home," Fleming said, holding her medal.

Most of the buzz focused on 16-year-old Oleksiak, who won four swimming medals at the Rio Games, including Canada's first gold.

"I didn't expect any of this," said Oleksiak, who was Canada's flag-bearer at the closing ceremonies. "I just want to say thank you to everyone (who cheered for me)."

Residents in Oleksiak's east-end Toronto neighbourhood known as The Beach are planning a celebration for her return, tentatively planned for Sunday.

Several of the returning athletes expressed gratitude for the support and encouragement they received from Canadians throughout the Games.

Long after most athletes had left the arrivals gate, gold medal-winning trampoline gymnast Rosie MacLennan stayed to sign autographs and take selfies with fans.

MacLennan, who carried Canada's flag at Rio's opening ceremonies, said making time for fans helps get them engaged in the Olympic process.

"It's a chance to share the experience with the people who supported us along the way," she said.

Teenage soccer fans Claire and Gillian Kilgour found out about the Olympic homecoming at midnight and got up at 4 a.m. to come to the airport with their father.

Three hours later, the 16-year-old twins were rewarded with an autograph from Kadeisha Buchanan, one of the bronze medal-winning women's soccer players.

The sisters stress they support the whole team, however.

"We don't have a favourite player," Gillian Kilgour said. "We like everybody." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Russell Martin drove in two runs and R.A. Dickey pitched into the seventh inning on Tuesday night as the Toronto Blue Jays beat the Los Angeles Angels 7-2.

Martin continued his torrid pace at the plate, racking up three hits and scoring once for Toronto (71-54). The Canadian entered the game hitting .414 in his last seven games with six home runs and 11 runs batted in.

Michael Saunders launched a solo shot while Darwin Barney had two hits, including a double, and scored twice. Melvin Upton Jr., Troy Tulowitzki and Josh Thole all drove in runs.

Dickey went 6-2/3 innings, allowing two runs on six hits while striking out two and walking two. His lone blemish came in the second inning when he gave up a two-run home run to Nick Buss.

Tyler Skaggs took the loss for the Angels (52-73), going four innings, allowing four runs on four hits while walking five and striking out two. He's now given up 19 earned runs in 17-2/3 innings through three August starts.

The Blue Jays remain tied for first place in the American League East division with the Boston Red Sox, who beat the Tampa Bay Rays 2-1 on Tuesday night. THE CANADIAN PRESS

LAWSUIT

Woman claims Blue Jay gave her STDs

A New York woman is suing Edwin Encarnacion, alleging the Toronto Blue Jays slugger knowingly infected her with two sexually transmitted diseases.

Ashley Lebron, 24, filed the lawsuit in a New York court on Monday. She says in a statement of claim she contracted genital herpes and chlamydia after having unprotected sex with Encarnacion in February. She's seeking $11.5 million US in damages.

The documents contain allegations that have not proven in court.

Encarnacion hasn't spoken publicly about the lawsuit battery. His agent, Paul Kinzer, said in a statement released to Fox Sports and Sportsnet that the claim is "completely inappropriate and meritless." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DOPING

Russia's ban from Paralympics upheld

Two days after Russia finished fourth in the Olympic medal table, its Paralympic team was barred from the next big Games in Rio de Janeiro as punishment for a state-backed doping program.

Sport's highest court on Tuesday upheld a decision by the International Paralympic Committee to exclude the sports superpower. It was a step the IOC declined to take when it had the chance last month.

The 267 entries which Russian Paralympic athletes earned in 18 sports for the Sept. 7-18 games in Rio will now be allocated to other nations not judged responsible for orchestrated cheating.

Russia won 36 gold medals at the 2012 Paralympics, second most in London, and was a runaway table-topping leader at its home 2014 Winter Paralympics.

Still, the Sochi Winter Games and Winter Paralympics are now notorious for results corrupted by state-funded agencies plotting to swap tainted doping samples from Russian athletes for clean ones at official testing laboratories. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kane responds to hall's call

CANADIAN WOMEN'S OPEN

Winner of four LPGA titles 'honoured' to be inducted

She was the fresh face of Canadian women's golf a year before Brooke Henderson was born.

Now Lorie Kane, who at 51 is making her 26th straight appearance at the Canadian Open, is being inducted into the Canadian Golf Hall of Fame.

"I'm very honoured to be able to say I'm going into the hall but at the same time I've always thought of the Hall of Fame as something that happens at the end of your career," Kane told reporters Tuesday.

"The day that Mike Weir accepted the invitation to the Hall of Fame was the day that I said if they come to me while I'm still playing I will welcome it."

Kane will tie the record for most consecutive starts at the Canadian Open with Hollis Stacy when she tees off Thursday at Priddis Greens Golf and Country Club.

Lorie Kane will make her record-tying 26th straight entry into the Canadian Women's Open this week at Priddis Greens Golf and Country Club southwest of the city. MATT ROBERTS/GETTY IMAGES

The Charlottetown native began her career on the LPGA Tour in 1996 at the age of 29 and earned four career Tour victories.

"I'm proud of myself. I've accomplished some things that I never thought would have been possible. To think in 20 years what I have achieved ... the four wins? It took me a long time to win the first one and then the next three came pretty quickly after that," she said with a chuckle.

"Definitely an inspiration to people my age."
Calgary golfer Jaclyn Lee, 18, on Lorie Kane

She recorded three Tour wins in 2000, becoming the second Canadian to win multiple events in a season. Sandra Post performed the feat twice in 1978 and 1979.

Henderson joined the multiple win club this year.

"She's not afraid to be out in front. I truly respect the way she plays in that she's accepting of what happens and she moves past it," Kane said of Henderson, who recently tied for seventh at the Rio Olympics.

"I've had enough time to play with her to see she's got all kinds of game. She swings a very big driver a very long way and I'm extremely proud of her."

Newcomers to the golf world say Kane has shown them kindness and some mentoring.

Calgary's Jennifer Ha, who turned professional last year, said she played with Kane at a mini-tour event in Daytona earlier this year and received some tips after the round was over.

"It was 30 minutes but it was awesome. It was very insightful. She invited me to her house to stay there if I had any tournaments up in Orlando," said Ha.

"Every time I've seen her since then she's given me a big hug. She's been a great role model for all Canadians."

The boys are back in their other uniforms.

Nathan MacKinnon posted a photo of him and Sidney Crosby in Tim Hortons outfits on his Instagram account Tuesday afternoon with the cryptic message, "We're back .."

The post didn't indicate where they were, but don't worry, news spreads fast in Halifax.

Yes, Sid and Nate showed up in uniform with cameras to a Tim Hortons on Barrington Street and reportedly placed a caffeine and sugar-filled order of 130 coffees, 85 iced coffees and 2,000 Timbits.

"A lot of people were really excited," said Tim Hortons team member Carli Jennings.

"We figured something was up but we didn't know what was happening," she added.

The hockey pair showed up during the lunch hour, walked in with a couple of camera people and left after a few minutes.

Last summer the pair were spotted at a Dartmouth, N.S., drive-thru weeks before a commercial was released.

RECIPE One-Pot Sweet Potato and Arugula Pasta

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

One-pot pasta meals pile ingredients together for dinner brilliance. We've paired the antioxidant power of sweet potato with peppery arugula but feel free to add other diced small veggies for quick cooking.

Ready in 30 minutes
Prep time: 10 minutes
Cook time: 20 minutes
Serves 4 to 6

Ingredients
- 450 grams penne pasta
- 8 cups baby arugula
- 1 sweet potato, diced into small cubes (to ensure they cook)
- 4 garlic cloves, cut in thin slices
- 1 shallot, cut into thin slices
- 1 sprig of rosemary
- 3 Tbsp of olive oil, plus 1 for garnish
- 1 Tbsp salt
- 6 cups water
- 1/2 cup grated Asiago or Parmesan cheese
- salt and pepper

Directions

1. Combine penne, arugula, sweet potato cubes, garlic, shallot, rosemary, 2 tablespoons oil, salt and water in a stock pot. Bring to boil over high heat. Boil mixture, stirring pasta frequently, until pasta is cooked al dente and water is nearly evaporated, 10 minutes.

2. Remove pot from heat and take out rosemary stem. Stir in last tablespoon of oil, cheese and season with salt and pepper to taste. Portion into bowls and serve with another sprinkle of cheese.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20
Plans will be challenging today. Prepare for this and cope as best you can. Similarly, situations with publishing, the media, medicine and the law are tough.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
Disputes about shared property and inheritances will not be easy today. You will be stopped by obstacles. Just do what you can.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Relations with partners and close friends are difficult because someone will oppose you today. Be prepared to accept this instead of making matters worse.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
Issues that are work-related are tough today. No matter what you do, you will meet with obstacles from others. Just cope as best you can.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Children will be an increased responsibility today. Naturally, this goes with the territory. Sigh, it happens.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Difficulties with family members will be challenging today because someone will oppose you. It might be wise to wait for another day to push your agenda.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Allow extra time today, because as this day unfolds, you will meet with delays, obstacles and minor difficulties.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Disputes about money or possessions are likely today. However, it will be difficult to reach an agreement. Why not postpone these talks for another day, when everyone is more co-operative?

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You will meet with opposition from someone. Don't give up. Just look for a new way around things, because there are many ways to do something. Be resourceful!

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Something secretive might throw a wrench in your plans today. Go slowly to see if you can work things out. You don't have to solve this problem today.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Someone in a position of authority might block your efforts to lead a group or make suggestions. Sometimes you can't fight city hall. Accept what you can and cannot do.

Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
It will be tough to get the approval of your boss or someone in power. Best to wait for another day so that you can steer things the way you want them to go.
